

Question 1:

A Shareholder requested clarification on whether the proposed diversification venture was related to the Company's existing logistics operations and if it had any connection to e-logistics, such as electronic communication networks.

Company's response

In response, the Chief Financial Officer of the Company (the "CFO") explained that the mobile distribution business primarily focuses on the distribution of mobile phones through brick-and-mortar stores. He clarified that, although this business is not directly related to the Company's current logistics operations, there were connections within the overall supply chain, including manufacturing, shipment, warehousing, transportation, and final delivery.

The CFO further mentioned that the Company's initial focus was on distribution and the contract with a key telecommunication company had provided an opportunity for the Company to expand its distribution network. He clarified that the mobile distribution is not related to e-logistics, but instead follows the 4PL approach, where the Company purchases and owns the stock while assisting the end manufacturer or owner with the distribution process.
